A Set of Twelve Cobalt Blue & Gilt Porcelain Dinner Plates
By Wedgwood

The set of plates all with finely hand-painted gilt neoclassical designs on a blue ground with swirls, floral garlands and victory laurels. The backs stamped with the Wedgwood marks, impressed with the year letter 'A,' and bearing the retailer's stamp of Mortlocks of Oxford St. English, dated 1898

Wedgwood

Founded in 1759 by Josiah Wedgwood, Wedgwood revolutionised English ceramics through refined creamware and later bone china. Renowned for classical elegance, innovation, and quality, its porcelain dinnerware became a symbol of taste among European aristocracy and beyond.

Mortlocks of Oxford Street

Established in 1746 by John Mortlock and continuing for nearly two centuries until 1933, Mortlocks was undoubtedly one of the most influential traders and marketers of porcelain in England. Supplying dinner services to the Royal family, the European aristocracy and beyond, the retailer popularised many new and innovative techniques and designs such as those made by Coalport, Minton and Wedgwood.
